District engineer department officials who have been examining the merits of a new street nomenciature system, proposed by .W. X. Stevens, have recated the conclusion that the plan does not offer advantages over the existing system.

On the ground that the present method of calling east and west streets by letters and proper names tends to confusion. Mr. Stevens recently suggested that every street lying east and west streets by letters and proper names tends to confusion. Mr. Stevens recently suggested that every street lying east and west be called an avacenue and numbered. In addition, the plan provides that the fifteen streets now lying cast and west shall remain unchanged, both as to titles and numbers, and that the seven avenues lying nearest in the streets nearest parallel to them. The scheme, in brief, is to have every street name relative to some well known center.

In addition, the plan provides that the fifteen streets now lying cast and west shall remain unchanged, both as to titles and numbers, and that the seven avenues lying nearest infiles, but be called streets in harmony with the streets nearest parallel to them. lature system. Daniel E. Garges, chief derk of the engineer department, yesterday said:

eity of Washington was adopted in 1791 by the commissioners who had charge of laying out the city. They informed Maj. L'Enfant, who planned the city, of their action in that respect. We have also agreed that the streets be named alphabetically one way, and numerically the other, the former to be divided into north and south, and the atter into east and west numbers fro the Capitol.

"Maj. L'Enfant adopted this street naming in making his map of the city, and the diagonal highways on the map were named after the states of the Union. "Outside of the original limits of the city, and before the adoption of the highway extension plain in 1904, no systematic naming of streets was in force, but by an act of Congress passed in 1904 the Commissioners were authorized to change the names of existing streets and to name new streets according to the highway plan.

Florida Avenue Then Boundary.

"The Commissioners, after carefully considering all suggested systems, finally decided that the best system to be adopted was one which would ex-tend the numbered north and south streets of the city into the country from the present city boundary to the District line, and to extend the alphabetical system on east and west streets prevailing within the city to the District line outside of the city by using the following method, namely: Florida avenue was the boundary to the old city of Washingtoh on the north. Streets running east and west which stopped at the boundary were continued beyond the boundary. These run to the letter 'W.' Beginning at that point the alphabetical system is tead, with names of two syllables, which system is continued northwardly, using the letters of the alphabet consecutively until exhausted, when names of three syllables, alphabetically arranged, are used until the District line is reached. Highways which do not run parallel to the lettered or numbered streets are given the designation of avenues or roads. This in general is the system that has been adopted for that part of the District of Columbia lying north, northwest and southeast and northeast of the city of Washington, and in these sections has been formally adopted by recording a map in the office of the streets of the city into the country from

No Authority to Change.

"The plan of Mr. Stevens does not appear to be any improvement over the ex-isting system. There are certain minor store of Barnett Cohen, 622 Pennsylvania streets within the old city limits similar on't Pay High Prices

These names were applied to such streets, however, before the system was adopted, and the Commissioners have an unthority to change such names unless within the District there are two or more streets bearing the same name. Under the adopted system Wiltberger street, as it lies between 6th and 7th streets, should properly be called 6th place, as place or minor streets between major streets, under the system, are supposed to bear the designation place and to bear the number of the lowest numbered of the two streets between which they are situated. If such a minor or place street is would receive a designation of a place street it would receive a designation of a place street with a name beginning with the letter A. The refusal of the Danish senate t tion treaty greatly surprised State De ment was forthcoming in advance o treaty might be rejected by the United States Senate because of the con-sistent attitude of the Senate against all general arbitration treaties, or those which did not expressly except from compulsory arbitration questions involving the national honors, matters of state legislation and affecting the Monroe doctrine, had been deemed a Secretary Bryan recently addressed the Senate committee on foreign relations in support of this treaty. While some objections developed among the some objections developed among the committee members on the ground that the interests of the United States in the West Indies were not properly guarded, it was believed that these could be overcome by slight amendment and that the Senate could be induced to accept the principle of un-limited arbitration to which it had fora genuine surprise, for the reason that, Bryan himself, this treaty was made at the request of the government of Denmark, which had made a similar treaty with Italy. Secretary Bryan realized that while it might not be timely to enter into such treaty relations with the great powers, there was every reason why the United States. Bryan himself, this treaty was made should test unlimited arbitrations with wish all of the smaller nations. He felt all of the smaller nations, the left that this gave an easy approach to the ultimate settlement of all international disputes by arbitration.

The Danish proposal was accepted, therefore, and the plan of general arbitration ingrafted upon one of the peace commission treaties, nine of which had previously been negotiated. In the Danish treaty it was proposed that if the International commission provided the International commission provided for to examine into the merits of dis-putes between the principals should fall putes between the principals should fail to reach a direct adjustment within one year, or if within that period the commissioners should concur in the opinion that such an adjustment was impossible, the dispute should be referred to the permanent court of arbitration at The Hague. The treaty was signed in Washington February 5, 1914, and has formed the base of several other projected treaties. Hence it becomes important for the State Department to know precisely the reason for the action of the Danish senate, as it may be necessary to amend some of the pending conventions to insure their acceptability.

'38" Packard "48" LUBRICATION SYSTEM APPEALS TO MECHANICS

High engine speed demands oil fed under pressure to all working bearings, including the thrust side of the piston on the power stroke. Oil fed to the pistons should be in proportion to the power requirements.

The Packard force feed oiling system provides fully and dependably for proper lubrication under every condition of service.

This means long life to the engines—smooth, velvety, silent operation after years of use.
